A DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE

OF

THE GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

OF

THE UNITED STATES,

SEPTEMBER 5, 1774—MARCH 4, 1881.

COMPILED BY ORDER OF CONGRESS

By BEN: PERLEY POORE

CLERK OF PRINTING RECORDS.

WASHINGTON:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

1885.
The want of a Descriptive Catalogue of the many thousand publications issued by the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Federal Government was first publicly discussed in 1845. The then existing catalogues and indices to the Government publications were so various and unsatisfactory that the labor of investigation had become uncertain and intolerable, a vast mass of the most interesting and valuable knowledge was virtually hidden, the benefits of the labors of the best minds of the country were diminished, and the lights of experience were obscured. It was then urged that a Descriptive Catalogue of official publications, which would afford direct access to every document, would greatly facilitate inquiry into the proceedings of government and its numerous agents. It would enable members of Congress, especially such as were not familiar with the public records, to master readily every subject of legislation, so far as it had been considered and reported on by their predecessors, and to ascertain and correct errors of others or to support their own views. From it the light of experience might readily be concentrated and diffused, and debate might be shortened yet made more instructive. Such a catalogue, furnishing also an historical outline of the printed results of the labors of the various judicial and executive departments, including the scientific publications, would, it was claimed, be alike useful to the publicist, the historian, and the journalist.

While the necessity for a Descriptive Catalogue of Government publications was admitted by all who considered the subject, and several propositions for the preparation of one were successively made by the Hon. William Lawrence, of Ohio, and other members of Congress, no action was taken on any of them. At last, on the 24th of March, 1881, the Hon. F. M. Cockrell, of Missouri, introduced a resolution into the United States Senate, which was passed, directing the heads of the Executive Departments and the Secretary of the Senate to report to Congress "complete lists of the works, documents, reports, and pamphlets issued, printed, or published by their respective Departments or by order of Congress, from March 4, 1789, to March 4, 1881." The execution of this order proved impracticable, as an enormous amount of labor was involved and no provision was made either for its direction or its remuneration.

When Congress met in December, 1881, Senator Cockrell introduced a bill for the preparation of a "Descriptive Catalogue of all publications made by the authority of the Government of the United States and the preceding Government of the colonies, and all departments, bureaus, and offices thereof, from July 4, 1776, to March 4, 1881," under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, and making an appropriation for the payment of those employed in the preparation of the work. This bill was enacted by Congress, and it was approved July 27, 1882.

When the members of the Joint Committee on Printing of the Forty-seventh Congress commenced the direction of the work thus entrusted to them, they were in the position of Christopher Columbus when he steered westward on his voyage of discovery, confident that a new world existed, but having no knowledge of its distance or the direction in which it lay. No one could estimate how many publications were to be catalogued, where they were to be found, how long it would take to perform the work, or what would be the probable cost. A plan for the work was adopted by which there was to be obtained in each case: I, the title of the book, pamphlet, or document; II, the name of its author; III, the date of its publication; IV, where it was to be found; and V, a brief abstract of its contents. These were to be chronologically arranged, and accompanied by a copious alphabetical and analytical index for convenience of reference. Work was commenced in accordance with this plan under the superintendence of two gentlemen, each one independent of the other; but when Congress met the ensuing winter it was found that slow progress had been made at a heavy cost, which had consumed a large share of the appropriation.
On the 1st of March, 1883, the work was placed under the superintendence of the subscriber, with directions to follow the plan approved by the committee, and to employ fourteen gentlemen, who were designated. They at once commenced work in the Libraries of Congress, of the Senate, of the House of Representatives, of the seven Executive Departments and their respective Bureaus, of the Department of Agriculture, of the Smithsonian Institution, of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, of the various exploring and scientific surveys, and in the public library of the city of Boston, which possesses an excellent collection of Congressional documents. The valuable collections of political pamphlets in the Congressional Library and several private collections of historical material were also carefully examined. Unfortunately, not one of the clerks employed possessed any experience in the performance of such work, and some proved to be so entirely incompetent that no use could be made of what they did; but by the patient and diligent application of the others, sixty-three thousand and sixty-three books, pamphlets, and documents were found and catalogued.

When the work was so far advanced that an estimate could be made of its probable size, it was found that if completed as it had been commenced it would make two bulky volumes. This was not desirable, and by direction of the Joint Committee on Printing those titles which had been completed were rewritten in a more condensed form, subsequently followed. This diminished the size, but impaired the fidelity of description in each individual title. Further appropriations were made by Congress for the prosecution of the work, and its scope was enlarged by including “publications of public interest purchased by the United States for use or distribution.”

The Index, that indispensable key to the Catalogue, was made as full as possible, without an unnecessary multiplication of titles, and many affiliated topics have been gathered together. The attempt to classify the separate topics was the more difficult because the reconstructed abstracts often failed to give a clear idea of the document to be indexed.

It was found, as the work progressed, that quite a number of executive documents had been printed by each of the printers of the two Houses of Congress. In most instances they were duplicates, but some of them varied, not only in the titles, but in the omission of paragraphs or sentences from one or the other copy. To have collated them would have required years of time, and the Joint Committee on Printing directed that each separate publication should be catalogued, without paying any regard to the existence of other editions. Some of the publications catalogued by different clerks working in different libraries were found to be in duplicate, but it was impossible to decide which copy should be retained and which omitted, so each one was given.

Those consulting the work will bear in mind that on many important questions no printed reports were made, and there is consequently no reference to them in this Descriptive Catalogue. The publications are all, or nearly all, in the Library of Congress; but reference has been made to those also in the department and other libraries as being there, for convenience of consultation.

The work, as finally completed, is neither too unwieldy for reference nor too ponderous for distribution as a public document. There are, doubtless, some errors arising from the employment of untrained and unskilful clerical assistance, but every effort has been made to insure accuracy in the time occupied in the compilation and stereotyping—about two years, after deducting the intervals when there was no available appropriation for the work. The volume is submitted with a full realization of its imperfections, but in the belief that it will facilitate an examination of the books, pamphlets, and documents published by or purchased by the Federal Government since its inception, many of which have been virtually unknown to publicists and the students of questions to which they relate.

The late Senator Anthony, of Rhode Island, chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, took a deep interest in the prosecution of the work, and his successors in the chairmanship of the committee, Senator Hawley, of Connecticut, and Senator Manderson, of Nebraska, have, in turn, done all in their power to facilitate the publication. My sincere thanks are also due the Hon. A. R. Spofford, Librarian of Congress, the Hon. Mellen Chamberlain, librarian of the Boston Public Library, and Lothrop Withington, esq., of Newburyport, for valuable aid, and to the Hon. S. P. Bounds, the efficient Public Printer, and his competent subordinates, Capt. H. T. Brian, Foreman of Printing, and Mr. Aven Pearson, Foreman of the Congressional Record.

New houses of Congress, and considered of sufficient value for future preservation.

These papers were selected with much care, on account of their public value and importance, from the great mass of manuscript and printed papers and documents, and compiled in the course of two houses, received from all sources and upon all subjects, having deficiencies supplied from the archives and records of the Executive Department. They consist of collections from the President, reports from the several Executive Departments and bureaus, reports of committees of the two houses, with documents and tables accompanying the same, as well as memorials, petitions, resolutions of State Legislatures, and all other papers communicated to one or both houses of Congress, and considered of sufficient value for future preservation.

These were divided into ten different classes, according to their nature or subject, as follows: viz:

- Vol. II, from February 28, 1790, to February 28, 1791.
- Vol. IV, from March 3, 1809, to February 28, 1819.
- Vol. VI, from March 2, 1827, to March 1, 1831.
